Sociology

Social contract is trust as:

- faith in cooperation;
- fidelity to partnership.

In the small, voice and agency.

In the large, government and society.

At their intersection, self government and management of enterprise.

In their opposition, the search for the intellectual connections that bring peace and dignity, survival and sustenance and maintenance.

Psychology

The substance and significance of the social consciousness is made plain by our psycho-physiological dependence upon these terms of society. Our physical economics are entirely social, which fact gives rise to the hierarchy of needs as an imperfect abstraction over these features of existence.

Philosophy

The objective skills of thought and sense handle or manage the tools of body and mind in sustenance and maintenance. The failures to develop and apply the objective skill, objectivity, are debts to our metaphysics. In the conduct of living and the course of life, our metaphysics envelop the choice of immediate future and the purpose of foreseeable future. This comprehension of past, present, and future contains the macro-material entirety.

Theology

The theist and atheist may debate the intersection with God. The theist maintains the logical God which defies intersection, and the atheist produces the historical God which intersects at invention.

The theist is constructive and intersecting, and the atheist is pedantic and tedious. If we could circumscribe our tools objectively, we might not attempt to cover embarrassments by recourse to atheism.

Sociognomy

A distinct socio-cultural poverty drives a fear complex to produce a variety of effects. These are raised out of the subjective bed of miscellania by their contrast to objective alternatives.
